American farmers will produce 14.2 billion bushels of corn and 4.38 billion bushels of soybeans, the top two U.S. crops in value, the U.S. Department of Agriculture said in two reports. While major growing states such as Iowa and Illinois may see smaller harvests because of weather damage, less-prominent corn-producers, from Pennsylvania to Mississippi, may have record yields. Harvest estimates for both commodities were higher than any forecast made in a Bloomberg survey of analysts, after the ninth-hottest July since 1895 seared crops across the U.S. Corn Belt. Spring-wheat and cotton harvests may also top expectations, the USDA said. “A big bearish surprise from the USDA,” Bloomberg Intelligence commodities strategist Mike McGlone said. “Virtually all estimates for yields, production and ending stocks were better than expected.” Corn for December delivery in Chicago fell as much as 2.7 percent to $3.7575 a bushel in Chicago after the USDA published the data, erasing earlier gains. Soybeans for November fell as much as 2.8 percent to $9.4575 while wheat were down as much as 2.8 percent to $4.73. Shares of Deere & Co., the world’s largest manufacturer of agricultural machinery, fell as much as 2.8 percent. The government’s forecast for U.S. and global crop inventories in 2018 exceeded projections. Russian wheat production is estimated at a record 77.5 million tons, up from 72.5 million last year. Ukraine and Kazakhstan estimates were also raised to levels near last year’s production. Where are the Tories? Boris Johnson appears on TV from time to time, and his party machine is said to be in the midst of a social media blitz. But wherever I have been over the past month, the supposed likely winners in this election have been all but invisible. I have encountered Labour, Liberal Democrat and Brexit party activists, but no teams of Conservatives. The party and its leader come up in conversation, and plenty of people say the Tories will get their vote, but there is a strange, almost ghostly aspect to the story: amid the noise, there is a party trying to creep back into power while making as little impression as possible. Think about the reality of Tory politics out in the country, and this sense of absence adds up. By contrast with Labour's 450,000-plus members, the Conservatives are reckoned to have around 160,000. How many of them are active is unclear, but four out of 10 are aged over 65, and 70% are men. After a decade of cuts, many of their councillors seem to be in a state of despondency and disaffection, complaining that their colleagues in national positions of power will not listen.
